History

Originally built in the late 18th century, this handsome Georgian townhouse was one of the first properties in the United Kingdom to receive a Grade II* listing by English Heritage in 1949. Constructed as a family home, it later became part of Abbotsford School in the early 20th century, remaining a school until around 2010. Prior to its school use, during the early years of World War I, it housed Belgian refugees and was supported by kind donations from local residents.

After the school's closure, the property stood empty and fell into disrepair until 2016, when a collaboration between Castle Homes of Warwick, Warwick District Council, and Historic England enabled a comprehensive restoration. Over a five-year period, Castle Homes of Warwick carefully reinstated the building's original grandeur, restoring key features such as the entrance hall, landings, staircases, principal rooms, and doors, while also conserving historic windows, cornices, fireplaces, wrought iron railings, and other architectural details.

As part of the restoration, the property was sensitively converted into two three-storey townhouses. No. 1 Abbotsford House retains the original hallway along with the principal living rooms and bedrooms. Architecturally, the house is constructed of brick with stone dressings, and notable historic features include two-storey canted bays, lunette windows, a doorway with Tuscan columns, and decorative pediments above the principal windows. At the time of sale, the property was the home of the Managing Director of Castle Homes of Warwick, who was so captivated by the building that he chose to make it his family's residence.
